Feature Films: Without doubt the most important developments in cultural policy in Switzerland during the past five years took place in films. For two decades lethargy had been widespread. In the same two decades the centre of cultural interest was clearly to be found in literature. This enthusiasm has now levelled off. The force which was felt in our literature has also gone. While the writers in recent times have only come together to find common cause in protest notes and quarrels in matters of their Association, while in their writings they are either preoccupied with discontent in a small state or the narrowness of Switzerland, the film-makers have been working - together with a section of the critics and with the more or less open blessing of the state, though without the support of the Swiss cinema industry, sometimes even against this branch of business - to establish a small but solid production basis, once more, that has been lacking for a long time - in fact, since the end of the war.

The cinema industry in Switzerland is completely import orientated. Since Swiss television has a relatively small production capacity - also a consequence of the smallness of this country - cinema has been able to retain a certain attraction. The crisis of the Swiss cinema industry has therefore not so far advanced as in other European countries. Around 500 feature films a year are imported, and a large part of them are also shown. Swiss film production, however, is condemned to a kind of partisan existence in the midst of a very prolific supply of international films.

In the past five years the Swiss film partisans have regained a couple of positions which they occupied during the Second World War as a result of import restrictions. First, they are finding more work through television and second, some have also found their way into the cinema. What it was not given to Jean-Louis Roy to achieve in 1967 with the first Geneva-Group feature film, "L'Inconnu de Shandigor" ("Stranger from Shandigor"), was Alain Tanner's triumph two years later with "Charles mort ou vif?" ("Charles, dead or alive?"). In 1973 there are to be at least eight films which will appear in the cinemas of our land just like movies from the United States, France or Italy. They are Alain Tanner's "Le retour d'Afrique" ("The Return from Africe"), Claude Goretta's "L'Invitation" ("The Invitation"), Yvan Butler's "La fille au violoncelle" ("The Girl with the Violoncello"), Pierre Koralnik's "La sainte famille" ("The Holy Family"), Maximilian Schell's "Fussgänger" ("Pedestrians"), Thomas Koerfer's "Der Tod des Flohzirkusdirektors" ("The Death of the Flea Circus Director") - with François Simon in the title role, and Daniel Schmid's "Heute Nacht oder nie" ("Tonight or never") and Bruno Soldini's "Storie di confine" ("Border Tales"). Six of these films are international co-productions, which is completely new here. The co-production agreement with France was reached only in 1972 and has been in force since the beginning of 1973.

At the moment there are still some Swiss films of older vintage in the cinema distribution chain: "Charles mort ou vif?" and "La Salamandre" ("The Salamander") by Alain Tanner, "Les Arpenteurs" ("The Surveyors") by Michel Soutter, "Le Fou" ("The Madman") by Claude Goretta, "L'Inconnu de Shandigor" and "Black-out" by Jean-Louis Roy, "Dällebach Kari" and "Der Fall" ("The Case") - two Swiss German dialect films - by Kurt Früh, and "Hannibal" by Xavier Koller. So, by all appearances, the 500 imported films will be set against some ten home productions in the coming years; still, a very unfavourable position, which would be conceivable in France or Italy.

Publisher of the brochure, and organiser of the Film Week on the Swiss side:

PRO HELVETIA in collaboration with the Swiss Film Center

The situation of the Swiss film must be considered with cautious optimism, although it has improved in this country and although interest has been aroused abroad. Above all, it remains to be seen whether the Swiss films on minimal budgets can assert themselves over the long term against the others, which cost several times as much. The pride and enthusiasm, and also the tendency to over-estimate home productions, which one can notice among some Swiss, are the reactions of numerous Davids, who are beginning to stand up to Goliaths.

Without a basic optimism and without hope in future films, not much new would appear in the unfavourable circumstances existing. Something new has recently developed: a number of films have just been completed which are conceived less for the cinema hall than for television, such as "Alfred R. - ein Leben und ein Film" ("Alfred R. - a life and a film") by Georg Radanowicz, "Le train rouge" ("The Red Train"), a long documentary by Peter Amman; other long documentary films are due to be completed shortly. For the cinema, too, a number of films should be finished or begun this year: Simon Edelstein, for years Michel Soutter's cameraman, has just ended the shooting of his first feature film, "Les mauvaises manières" ("Bad Manners"). Michel Soutter will be making his sixth film; the Swiss Germans Peter von Gunten and Markus Imhoof, till now known as documentary film makers, will be bringing out their first feature films, "Njetschajev 1869-72" ("Nechayev 1869-72") and "Fluchtgefahr" ("Flight Danger") respectively, and a team from Basle (Aebersold, Klopfenstein and Schaad) is trying the completely new field of the action film with their crime and smuggling story from the Jura.

For many Swiss film makers, the full-length feature film is in any case not the acme of production. The basis of our small national film history still consists of a relatively large number of independently produced, medium and long documentary films and an astonishingly broad spectrum of short films.

Martin Schaub

Documentary Films: Of 77 films produced in Switzerland in the years 1964 - 1971 (those which could be considered representative), 31 - or 40 % - were documentary films (feature films 14 %, "other films" (including art films) 46 %. In contrast to the feature films, the documentaries brought a better return on their investment: 58 % of all the documentary films considered covered their costs or even brought in a profit, compared with 37 % of all feature films. The documentary film is firmly anchored in the Swiss independent film scene for good material reasons. The investment is smaller, the chance of success is greater from the artistic point of view - at least with short and medium-length films. In addition, there are firm customers and co-producers for documentary films: television in the first place, but also private institutions and organisations. The Confederation restricted itself to promoting documentary films with its credits until 1969. Showings are given to short films and documentaries everywhere, except in the commercial cinema: on television, in schools, youth clubs, communal cinemas and special performances. The returns are to some extent calculable and - measured against successful feature films - quite modest. So it is perhaps typically Swiss that the documentary film has a tradition here and kept its international reputation even during the feature film crisis of the late Fifties.

There are, however, still other reasons why younger film-makers decide for the documentary film - or rather, for the documentary-type film. With the declaration "A film is a film is a film" the exile-Swiss Godard proclaimed the individuality of the film and thereby showed the "feature film" and the pre-eminent position granted to it to be a chimera. Isn't the "feature film" the Promised Land of our childhood dreams? Wanting to play God is part of it. To run the machine and the actors with a megaphone, a longing for the great glittering world, a desire for fame and stars, this may have been the attraction at the beginning for directors. But times have changed. How quickly do "feature films" age. We are amused by them in the same way as we enjoy the "Gartenlaube" Almanacs of our great-grandparents. The "feature film" is certainly not the "Crowning achievement of film", but just one possible form of film making and a particularly deceptive one as well. The best "feature film" include documentaries; I am thinking of "Man of Aran", of "Los Olvidados", of "Creed", of the Russian classics. But also of Rosi's "Le mani sulla città" or the films of Alvarez. No film-maker can escape the laws of photography. And nothing in film ages faster than make-up and decor. The most widely distributed common factor for the film-maker is to be found in what unites us: the everyday and elementary facts of life. For this reason documentary films are mostly political films. They do not divert us. The imitation and articulation of reality remains a political act.

Documentary films in Switzerland are for the most part political films. Our relationship to the Third World is analysed by Peter von Gunten in "Bananera Libertad". He does not just take a particular model of progress as his point of departure, but reveals us - black and white - as the root of the problem. The "Third World" inside Switzerland and the social tensions arising from this are treated by Peter Amman and René Buri in "Braccia si - uomini no" ("Workers yes - Humans no" the problems of foreign workers) and by Kurt Gloor's "Die Landschaftsgärtner" (showing the problems of mountain farmers). In "Zur Wohnungsfrage", Hans Stürm shown where profit maximisation is leading for apartment building.

No direct political "engagement" or problem orientation is to be found in the "portrait films" popular in Switzerland. Among them I would count Claude Goretta and Alain Tanner's film "Nice Time", about Picadilly Circus, which was produced through the British Film Institute. Through the picture of a 15 year old American girl, Alexander J. Seiler's short film "fifteen" also provides information on the society from which she comes. Fredi M. Murer uses a similar technique - though not the medium of direct cinema - in his portrait of the surrealist Hans-Ruedi Giger and his strange world which, he makes us aware, is also ours.

The documentary and documentary-style films shown in London and mentioned here are only a small part of the Swiss production in this field. Further details about documentary, short, animated and experimental film production can be found in the author index printed in this brochure or in the Swiss Film Catalogue.

SWITZERLAND'S ORGANISATIONS PROMOTING FILMS:

Department of Home and Cultural Affairs

The Confederation supports Swiss film production on the artistic level, along the lines laid down by Article 27 of July 6, 1958 of the Federal Constitution and the Federal Law on Motion Pictures of September 28, 1962/December 19, 1969. Support is granted from the viewpoint of cultural policy and based on the criteria of quality and continuity, independent of the content and artistic tendency of a film.

Federal film promotion includes both Swiss and Swiss/foreign productions. The present annual credit of 1,5 million francs provides for the following types of aid:

Production credits - usually up to 50 per cent of the total costs and not more than 200,000 francs for feature films and 50,000 francs for other films

Awards for films of outstanding quality, usually up to 100,000 francs for full-length films and 20,000 francs for other films

Scholarship awards, up to 5,000 francs, for films which reveal new talents

Scholarships for professional training and postgraduate studies of film-makers and film technicians

Credits for screenplays to be completed

Credits for organizations concerned with film culture and for presentation of Swiss films at international film events

Federal film promotion is the responsibility of the Department of Home and Cultural Affairs; its Office for Cultural Affairs includes a Film Section. It makes its decisions after consulting special committees of the Federal Film Commission and Pro Helvetia Foundation. Applications for quality and scholarship awards are also considered by an expert jury.

Foundation Pro Helvetia

Swiss film production has its appropriate place in the activities of the PRO HELVETIA Foundation, which among other things promotes Swiss cultural life and cultural relations with other countries. Pro Helvetia makes considerable grants to film projects and in collaboration with the Swiss Film Center, organises film weeks abroad. It loans films on cultural themes to interested bodies abroad, mainly through Swiss Embassies and Consulates.

Swiss Film Center

The SWISS FILM CENTER is both project and reality. The project: a film promotion institute which, complementary of the aid granted by the Confederation, will 'support Swiss film-making in production, promotion and all other aspects'. The reality: some progress towards this goal has already been made. The "Society for a Swiss Film Center" has set up a permanent office in Zurich. Apart from its activity in film politics, it is doing practical work in distribution, documentation and promotion at home and abroad. This office takes care of the Film-Pool (p. 12). It organises performances of Swiss films on a national and international level and collaborates with equivalent organisations in other countries. It concerns itself also with the international exchange of films. An example for this part of its activity is its contribution to the programs of the Zurich City FILMPODIUM. (This institution, in a first step towards a Municipal Cinema, makes available to a wider public those films which under the present distribution system do not, or no longer, reach the public in the commercial theatres.)

Film-Pool

The Film-Pool is an organisation for film rental and distribution set up by film-makers in collaboration with the SWISS FILM CENTER. Its services are available to all Swiss film-makers. The SWISS FILM CENTER's office takes care of the rental and distribution service, and orders of Film-Pool prints can only be accepted through the Center. The SCHWEIZER SCHUL- UND VOLKSKINO (Swiss School and General Film Institute) in Berne stocks, services and dispatches the prints. After projection the copies have to be returned to the storehouse in Berne.

Nearly all films of recent production in Switzerland can be obtained through the Film-Pool. Author-producers of most films also have their own copy, so that a print may also be obtained from them at the same price.

The prices asked by the Film-Pool are SFr. 20.-- for handling, plus a rate proportional to the length, ranging from SFr. 2.50 for a one-minute film to SFr. 1.67 per minute for a 90-minute film. The prices are nominal ones for a single projection. In individual cases, and for several performances, lower charges may be made. Prints that are out of the hands of the Film-Pool for an extended period (abroad) are charged at the rate of a single projection for each week or part of a week. Commercial presentation is governed by special regulations. Films must be ordered from the pool at least ten days before performance.

The Film-Pool works on a non-profit basis and in the best interest of the author-producers.

Swiss Association of Film-makers

The Swiss Association of Film-makers is a national organisation of independent film directors. The Association today has about sixty members and is open to all film-makers who produce 'film d'auteur' as defined in the statutes, without limitations to the type of film. The Association concerns itself mainly with questions of film politics. Thus, for example, it has made decisive efforts for a revision of the Federal Film Law, which as a result now permits subventions for feature films.

Association of Swiss Film Producers

The Association of Swiss Film Producers is the biggest and the oldest organisation of Swiss film producers (founded 1934).

Swiss Animation Film Group

The Swiss Animation Film Group was founded in 1968. Today it has 58 active members in 1972. It is a national section of the International Association for the Animated Film (ASIFA). This comprises 813 members in 30 countries. The generic title, Animated Film, covers all film productions which use single-frame techniques to make films. The art of the animated film, in no matter what form it is presented (cinema, televi-

Der Film: Pepe träumt still vor sich hin. Dieses Portrait dauert in Wirklichkeit nur 7 Sekunden, und zeigt was für Veränderungen in dieser kurzen Zeit im Gesicht vorgehen. Die Kamera läuft mit 500 Bildern in der Sekunde. Zum Schluss wird Pepe brutal von einer Faust aus dem Bildfeld geschlagen.

Der Film: Der Grundgedanke dieses Films ist, auf abstrakte Weise die Entstehung, Uebervölkerung und den Zerfall der Menschen zu zeigen. Die Darsteller sind verschiedene Nägel. Grosse, kleine, dicke, dünne. Sie sind ununterbrochen beschäftigt, sich zu vermehren, Städte zu bauen, bis nirgendwo mehr Platz ist um zu Leben. Sie sind zum Untergang verurteilt.

The author: Kurt Aeschbacher, born in 1936 in Zurich. Apprenticeship as a black- and wheelsmith, five years as unpaid assistant in commercial art studio, then photo-compositor in printing shop, photo-laboratory assistant, camera assistant, since 1967 cameraman specialized in cartoons and special effects. Films: 1968 "Jimmy" / 1969 "La Maggia" / 1971 "ok pepe ko", "Die Nägel". Photography for "Fanø Hill", assistant to the director in "DDanach", various commercials.

The film: The idea is to show the origin, overpropagation and degeneration of the human race in an abstract way. The actors in this film are various nails. Large nails, small nails, thick nails, thin nails. They are constantly busy propagating, spreading, building cities - until there is no more space to live. They are condemned to self-destruction.

die Ueberfremdung von Volk und Heimat" abzustimmen. "Braccia sì, uomini no" (Arbeitskräfte ja, Menschen nein) ist ein Dokument zur Auseinandersetzung um die Ueberfremdungsinitiative und das Problem der Fremdarbeiter. Der Film wurde zwischen Ende April und dem 7. Juni 1970 gedreht, als der Abstimmungskampf seinen Höhepunkt erreichte und die Schweiz zu einem einzigen, grossen Diskussionsforum wurde, in dem jedermann sich mit der Frage der ausländischen Arbeitskräfte und der sogenannten Ueberfremdung auseinandersetzte. Es war, als sei das Land in seinem Dornröschenschlaf gestört worden. Eine Schicht von Ausländern, die mehr als 15 % der Gesamtbevölkerung ausmacht und fast nur die sogenannten "niederen" Arbeiten verrichtet, stellt die Schweiz als Nation und Demokratie in Frage.

The film: June 7, 1970, an 'Initiative against the foreign infiltration of people and country' launched by James Schwarzenbach and his movement, was put to vote before the Swiss citizenry. "Braccia sì - uomini no" ("Workers yes - Humans no") is a document about the discussion concerning this initiative. The film was made between the end of April and June 7, 1971, as the controversy reached its climax and Switzerland became one large discussion platform on which everybody got involved with the question of foreign workers and the so-called foreign infiltration. The country seemed to have been woken from its beauty sleep. A class of foreigners, more than 15 % of the entire population and performing almost exclusively "lower" jobs, confronts Switzerland with its own existence as a nation as well as a democracy. Le film: "Quand elle était petite, Marie n'avait pas de plus grand plaisir que de monter avec son père sur le char attelé aux deux gros chevaux pommelés et qu'il allait livrer la viande. Au retour, ils s'arrêtaient toujours au café de Jeanne..."

"Marie Besson" est l'histoire de la fille d'Edouard Besson, maître-boucher à Morges, vers 1905. Elle a dix-huit ans, elle termine l'Ecole Supérieure. C'est la fin du printemps.... Une histoire douce, terrible et triste. Une histoire imaginaire, mais certainement réelle.

The film: "It was one Sunday in autumn, the middle of November, and through the open window, beyond the garden, the trees and the low stunted hedge, I saw the lake..." Produced by MILOS-FILMS SA for German Television's Channel Two, this film is dedicated to all those who are not content to look at the world but want to see it change. Performances, prizes: 1971: Cannes official entry, Mannheim, Nyon (commended), Swiss Government Award.

The film: "When she was small, Marie had no greater pleasure than climbing aboard her father's cart with its two huge dappled horses in harness as he set off to deliver meat to his customers. On the way home, they always stopped at Jeanne's café..." "Marie Besson" is the story of the daughter of Eduard Besson, master butcher of Morges, at around 1905. She was eighteen, just out of school. It was the end of spring... A tender story but terrifying and sad. A work of fiction but none the less real.

The Film: Goretta transformed Maupassant's theme into a typically French-
Swiss picture of somewhat puritan aspect, a minor chronicle of our time.
A Geneva family, the Dufours, want to have lunch at a restaurant out in the country, but find there is no room for them, a wedding party having taken all the available space. Following an old tradition, the party people invite the first passer-by, who happens to be the Dufour's son Philippe.
Dancing with the bride, he incurs the young husband's anger, who assaults him. They are parted, but Philippe and the bride run away together. Her father-in-law, an authoritarian type, organizes a large-scale pursuit.
"Wedding Day" depicts a gallery of characters, the catalyst of temperaments and sentiments being the countryside itself. Established patterns all crumble on making contact with nature.

Der Film: Ein Film über die Dritte Welt - ein Film über Lateinamerika - der die Ursachen der sogenannten Unterentwicklung in Paraguay, Peru und Guatemala aufdeckt und die schweizerische Wohlstandsgesellschaft in einen Zusammenhang dazu stellt. Bananera-Libertad ist kein Bilderbuchfilm. Sie sehen keine Sehenswürdigkeiten und keine touristischen Attraktionen. Der Film zeigt die Realität in der der Grossteil der lateinamerikanischen Bevölkerung leben muss. Er zeigt die verarmten Bauern, die peru-anischen Minenarbeiter, die Kaffeepflanzer und die Grossgrundbesitzer. Bananera-Libertad schildert den Einfluss der nordamerikanischen Gesellschaften in den Silber-, Blei- und Kupferminen und auf den Bananenplantagen von Guatemala. Der Film ist in einer Sprache gesprochen, die auch Schweizer verstehen und akzeptieren müssen. Es ist kein Film für Revolutionäre - aber ein Dokument über die Notwendigkeit sozialer, wirtschaftlicher und politischer Veränderungen in Lateinamerika - es ist ein Film für die Revolution. Bananera-Libertad ist eine Stellungnahme. Eine Stellungnahme gegen die 500 Jahre dauernde Vernichtung der Indios durch unser Eindringen in ihre Kultur und durch unseren Eingriff in ihre Freiheit. Der Film zeigt, dass unser Anspruch auf kulturelle und technologische Überlegenheit das Merkmal des weissen Rassismus in sich trägt. Eines Rassismus im Dienste der immer noch vorhandenen Unterdrückung und Ausbeutung in der Dritten Welt durch die Industrienationen. Vorführungen, Preise: 1971: Solothurn, Oberhausen, Int. The film: A film about the third world - about Latin America - which uncovers the origins of the so-called underdevelopment in Paraguay, Peru and Guatemala and shows how Switzerland's affluent society is connected to it. Bananera Libertad is not a picture-book film. It offers no sights to see. The film shows the reality in which most Latin-Americans have to live. It shows impoverished farmers, Peruvian miners, coffee-planters and great landowners. Bananera Libertad demonstrates the influence of the North American corporations on the silver, lead and copper mines and on the banana plantations in Guatemala. The film uses a language which must be understood and accepted also by people in Western Europe. It is not a film for revolutionaries, but a document about the necessity of social, economic and political changes in Latin America - a film for the revolution. Bananera Libertad - takes a stand - a stand against the extermination of the Indios which we started 500 years ago and continued ever since by our invasion of their culture and our intervention in their freedom. The film shows that our pretension to cultural and technological superiority bears in fact all the characteristics of racism - a racism in the service of the still existing oppression and exploitation of the third world by the industrial nations.

The film: The tapestry with its loving couples was especially woven for Hermann Hesse by Maria Gerö. For many years it decorated his workroom. The poet had prized the work of art highly and devoted a text to it. The prose piece form the basis for the film "Ueber einen Teppich".

Der Film: "Passagen" zeigt das Werk und die Arbeit des Malers H.R. Giger, der zu den bedeutendsten Vertretern des phantastischen Realismus in der Schweiz gehört. Die Inhalte seiner Bilder gehen über das Private hinaus und enthalten eine Bedeutung für eine Epoche, die, wie man sagt "mit der Bombe lebt". Wobei "die Bombe" stellvertretend für alle Gefahren zu verstehen wäre, die das Überleben der Menschheit in Frage stellen, - oder handelt es sich nur um das Überleben einer bestimmten Gesellschaft? Seine Bilder sind wie Träume eines Seismographen. Bewusste und unbewusste Erfahrungen schlagen sich in ihnen nieder. Das Spektrum seiner Inspiration reicht von frühen Kindheitserinnerungen und Träumen über Musik, Literatur und Wissenschaft bis zu den gesellschaftlichen Verhältnissen. Es geht aber nicht darum, anhand seiner Bilder, Giger einer Psychoanalyse zu unterziehen; hingegen versucht der Film seine künstlerische Arbeit, ihr Lavieren zwischen bewussten und unbewussten Einflüssen, ihre Strukturierung und Entwicklung sichtbar zu machen. Auch geht es nicht in erster Linie darum das fertige Bild zu zeigen, sondern vielmehr den Weg, der zu ihm geführt hat. Es soll ersichtlich werden, dass der Maler mit einem in seiner Innen- und Aussenwelt vorhandenen Material arbeitet. Das Bild ist insofern nicht allein ein "schönes" Objekt, sondern das Produkt einer Arbeit, ein Gewebe von Erfahrungen, ein Seismogramm, das vom Betrachter nicht nur angeschaut, sondern auch gelesen werden kann - oder muss, wie ein Text oder ein Traum. In diesem Sinne soll der Film das idealistische Künstler-Image vom Genius, der aus nichts etwas macht, entmystifizieren.

Georg Radanowicz

The film: "Passagen" (Passages) shows the work and works of the painter, H.R. Giger, who is one of the most important representatives of realistic fantasy in Switzerland. The content of his pictures goes beyond the purely private and contains a message for an age which - as one says - "lives with the Bomb". By which the "Bomb" is to be understood as standing for all the hazards which put the survival of mankind in question, - or is it only the survival of a certain society? His pictures are like the dreams of a seismograph. Conscious and unconscious experiences vie with each other on his canvases. The spectrum of his inspiration ranges from early childhood memories and dreams, to music, literature and science to social relationships. But the aim is not to use Giger's pictures to produce a psychoanalytical account. On the contrary, the film tries to make visible the structure, development and swings between conscious and unconscious influences in his artistic work. Nor is it the film's main concern to show the completed picture, but rather the way which led towards it. It should be clear that the painter works with material from his inner and outer world which lies close to hand. The picture is not just a "beautiful" object, but the product of an effort, a reworking of experiences, a seismogram, which should not just be observed by the spectator, but also "read" as a text - or a dream. In this sense, the film should help destroy the myth of the artist genius who makes something out of nothing.

Der Film: Ausgehend von einer wahren Biographie eines Freundes aus Zürich, der Selbstmord verübt hat, sucht Radanowicz in seinem Film nicht so sehr die Auseinandersetzung mit einem "falschen Leben", als vielmehr die Reflexion über die emotionelle und gesellschaftliche Bedeutung des Todes. Im Film sieht man den letzten Morgen von Alfred R. in seinem Zimmer und in Rückblenden einen Bruchteil seiner geschäftlichen Tätigkeit, verwoben mit optischen und musikalischen Interpretationen subjektiver Zustände. Der einzige Darsteller im Film ist Xavier Koller in der Rolle des Alfred R. Die unausgesprochene politische Aussage des Filmes ist das in Frage stellen des leistungsbedingten Erfolgsdenkens. Alfred R. ist gescheitert, weil er an einem einseitigen Erfolgsmodell festhielt, was auch seine psychische Manie bedingte. An den Zuschauer werden Anforderungen gestellt. Der Film behandelt ein gesellschaftliches Tabu, das des Selbstmordes, und beinhaltet weder gesellschaftliche noch psychologische Urteile. Dies, um dem Zuschauer eine offene Auseinandersetzung mit dem Tod und dem Alltagsleben des Alfred R. zu ermöglichen. Der Film hält sich unvermeidlich in Allgemeinheiten über Alfred R. auf, aber in reichlich auslegbaren Allgemeinheiten.

The film: Starting from the true story of a friend from Zurich who committed suicide, Radanowicz in his film is not aiming to delineate the struggle with an "inauthentic life" so much as to reflect the emotional and social meaning of a death. In the film Alfred R. is seen in his room on the last morning and a fraction of his business activity in flashback, interwoven with optical and musical interpretations of subjective states. The only actor in the film is Xavier Koller in the role of Alfred R. The unspoken political message of the film is to throw into question the philosophy of success. Alfred R. lost his battle with life because he clung to a one-track idea of success, which was also responsible for his psychological problems. A challenge is made to the spectator. The film treats a social taboo, that of suicide, and makes neither social nor psychological verdicts. This is to enable the audience to come to grips with the death and everyday life of Alfred R. The film keeps inevitably to the ordinary facts of life about Alfred R., but to significant facts.

Der Film erzählt die Geschichte einer Soirée, die einmal jährlich gegeben wird. Während man sich zum Souper begibt, werden die Rollen vertauscht: Die Herrschaft bedient, die Dienerschaft tafelt. Eine Komödiantentruppe ist für die Nacht engagiert worden, die während des Essens eine dramatisierte Fassung der Sterbeszene von 'Madame Bovary' gibt. Die Soirée nimmt ihren rituellen Verlauf. Vor dem Hintergrund einer kollektiv empfundenen Dekadenz wird von allen Seiten mit allen verfügbaren Mitteln falsch gespielt. Die Störungsversuche der Komödianten, die sich mit der Dienerschaft zu solidarisieren versuchen, werden von letzteren ignoriert oder nicht verstanden, von der bedienenden Herrschaft jedoch als "Ueberraschungsnummer" applaudiert. Man lacht, flirtet und tanzt Tango in einem Raum, der den deutlichsten Ausdruck der bürgerlichen Ideologie darstellt:

The film tells the story of a banquet which is given once a year. During the meal the traditional roles are reversed: the masters serve and the servants sit at table. A troop of actors is engaged for the evening. They give a dramatic rendering of the death scene from 'Madame Bovary' during the banquet. The evening runs its ritualistic course. Against the background of collective decadence, each side plays a false role with all available means. The actors' attempts at disruption, in an effort at solidarity with the servants, are ignored or not understood by the latter, and applauded by the serving masters as a "surprise number". People laugh, flirt and dance the tango in a hall which presents the clearest expression of bourgeois ideology. The "cast of characters" does not represent psychological character-drawing, but rather permanently changing situations. The evening ends with everyone withdrawing to the position he started from. Der Film: Kurz nach ihrem 15. Geburtstag kommt Joan aus Kalifornien auf ein Jahr nach Europa. Sie bringt mit: ihre Gitarre, eine hübsche Stimme, ein paar Beat-Platten, Freude am Tanzen und den Drang, sich selber darzustellen. Sie bringt aber auch mit: 20 Kilo Uebergewicht, einen "hübschen Fall von Selbstzerstörung" und das Gefühl, in eine Welt hineinzuwachsen, die jeden Augenblick explodieren kann.

"Das präziseste Porträt war jedoch zweifellos Alexander J. Seilers Film 'Fifteen', ein erstaunlich direkter Monolog eines jungen amerikanischen Mädchens, das allerlei Sorgen mit seinem Gewicht und wohl auch mit seinen Eltern hat, das oft und schön Gitarre spielt und manchmal auch ans Sterben denkt. Mit 'Fifteen' hat Seiler zweifellos seinen besten Film geschaffen - eine äusserst subtile Aufzeichnung von heimlichen und offenen Wünschen, von grossen und kleinen Bedenken und Ängsten, in denen nicht nur die Seelenverfassung eines Mädchens sichtbar wird, sondern auch vieles von der Verfassung der Gesellschaft, in der es lebt." (Beat Müller, ZUERICHSEE-ZEITUNG).

"Man dringt ein, und zwar ohne das Gefühl, indiskret zu sein, in die Sensibilität eines Teenagers und meint, es sei das Ganze auch hervorragend geeignet, etwas von den Vereinigten Staaten begreifen zu können. So offen der Film daliegt: er birgt, als erster in Seilers Schaffen, auch ein faszinierendes Geheimnis." (xb., NEUE ZUERCHER ZEITUNG).

The film: Shortly after her fifteenth birthday Joan comes from California to Europe for a year. She brings along: a guitar, a sweet voice, a couple of beat records, her love of dancing and her urge to be herself. But she is also accompanied by a surplus 40lb., a "nice case of self destruction" and the feeling that she has grown up into a world that could explode at any moment. "The most accomplished portrait was - no doubt about it - Alexander J. Seiler's film 'Fifteen', an astonishingly direct monologue by a young American girl, who has all kinds of problems with her weight and her parents, who doesn't know what to do and frequently plays guitar - and who sometimes thinks of death. 'Fifteen' is probably Seiler's best film so far - an extremely subtle presentation of secret and overt desires, of pangs of conscience - small and large, of fears which lay bare not only the soul of young girl, but also much of the state of society in which she lives". (Beat Müller, ZUERICHSEE-ZEITUNG). Made in 1968. Performances, prizes: Swiss Government Award, Locarno, Florence.

The film: As a favour to Lucien, Léon, a big talker who is surveying in the district, agrees to take a basket of vegetables to Alice. At her home he finds Ann, and takes her for Alice. She gives him such a welcome that he forgets to take his basket away with him. So he returns to collect it a little later and discovers Alice, who following up the clue offered by a cigarette lighter guesses that a mysterious secret is locked up in her room. Alice makes advances to Léon, Lionheart that he is. But he is a seducer who wants to find out the explanation for the worrisome disappearance of Ann before allowing himself to be seduced.

Der Film: Friedrich Engels schrieb 1972 in "Zur Wohnungsfrage", dass das Wohnungsproblem nicht nur eine Frage der räumlichen und hygienischen Verhältnisse, sondern immer auch ein Herrschaftsinstrument in den Händen der herrschenden Klasse sei.

"Zur Wohnungsfrage" ist ein Film zum Wohnungsproblem in den heutigen europäischen Grossstädten wie Berlin, Dortmund, Düsseldorf, Essen, Mannheim, München und Zürich.

Daniel Suter

Im ersten Kapitel: "Wohnen im Grünen" geht es um diese Ideologie, die Ruhe, Gesundheit und Natur suggerieren soll, und mit der sich die Investoren und Immobilienfirmen ein Alibi für ihre Interessen schaffen wollen. Das zweite Kapitel: "Wohnen im Ghetto" zeigt die entstehenden Konsequenzen, die soziale und wirtschaftliche Isolierung und Desintegration dieser Menschen auf. Im dritten Kapitel: "Zuckerbrot und Peitsche" wird die Frage nach dem Zusammenhang, respektive der Trennung von Arbeitsplatz und Wohnplatz, der Sphären von Produktion und Konsum gestellt, und es werden die verheerenden Konsequenzen dieser wirtschaftlichen Ausbeutung, die Obdachlosensiedlungen, aufgezeigt. Im vierten Kapitel: "Wohnungsnot und Herrschaft" wird die entscheidende Frage nach den Kriterien für die Entwicklung und Planung unserer Städte gestellt und aufgezeigt, wer letzten Endes hier entscheidet. Preise, Ausgewählt für das Festival von: 1972 Qualitätsprämie, Oberhausen, Leipzig, Nyon (Prix de L'Association Internationale des Documentaristes; Prix de la Fédération Internationale des Ciné-Clubs).

The film: In "Zur Wohnungsfrage" (About the Housing Question), Friedrich Engels wrote that the housing problem was not just a matter of physical and hygienic conditions, but was still an instrument of control in the hands of the ruling class. "Zur Wohnungsfrage" is a film about the housing problem in today's European cities such as Berlin, Dortmund, Düsseldorf, Essen, Mannheim, Munich and Zurich.

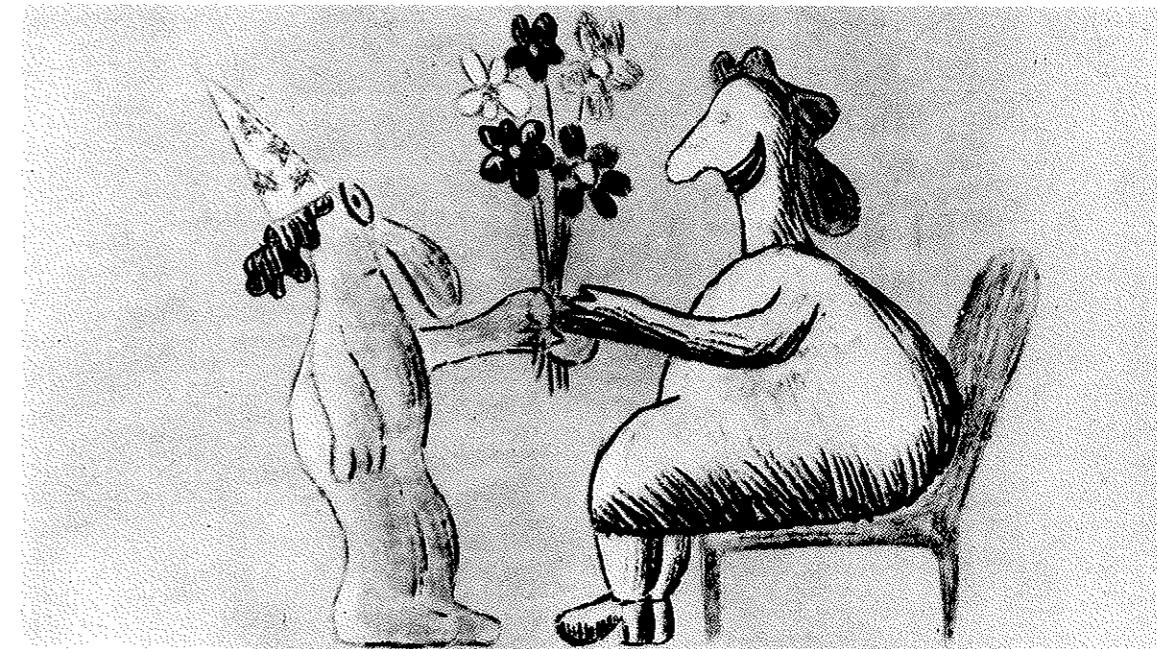

In the first chapter, "Wohnen im Grünen" (Living in the Green Belt), the spotlight turns on this ideology with its suggestion of quiet, health and nature, which gives the building firms and investors an alibi for their business promotions. The second chapter, "Wohnen im Ghetto" (Living in the Ghetto), shows the inevitable consequences, the social and economic isolation and the disintegration of these people. In the third chapter, "Zuckerbrot und Peitsche" (The Sweet and the Whip), the question is raised about the connection between the separation of workplace and home and the sectors of production and consumption, and the usual consequences of this economic exploitation, the shacks of those without homes, is presented. In the fourth chapter, "Wohnungsnot und Herrschaft" (Housing shortages and control), the decisive question is put: what are the criteria for developing and planning our cities? The film shows who finally decides.

Le film: La recherche du divertissement et de l'évasion pousse les gens à se rassembler en un endroit où, comme dans toutes les villes, sont concentrés les divers moyens de satisfaire à ces besoins. A Londres, le phénomène est particulièrement frappant car le centre des amusements n'occupe qu'une surface très limitée: Piccadilly Circus et les rues environnantes. La statue d'Eros domine la foule du samedi soir. Les gens font la queue devant les cinémas pendant que les portiers crient les prix des places. Les vendeurs ambulants offrent leur camelote. Des jeunes gens déambulent en quête d'aventures. Pour certains le spectacle est la rue elle-même et ses immenses enseignes lumineuses... Onze heures: l'hymne national marque la fin des spectacles. Lentement la foule se dirige vers le métro. Un employé annonce bientôt la dernière rame. Après minuit, des groupes demeurent: filles, marins, soldats américains que la police essaie de temps en temps de disperser, sans beaucoup de succès. Aux premières heures du matin, quelques insatisfaits restent et attendent..."Nice Time" est une série d'impressions sur la réalité du samedi soir. Une réalité que nous avons interprétée pour en dégager une signification et présenter ce que Jean Vigo appelait: un point de vue documenté.

The film: In any big town, the search for amusement and escape brings people together into one place, where all the different means offered to satisfy their needs are concentrated. In London the phenomenon is particularly striking because the area in which the amusements are centred is so restricted: Piccadilly Circus and the streets around it. The statue of Eros - aptly - dominates the Saturday night crowds. People queue in front of the cinemas while the commissionnaires call out the prices of the seats. The street vendors offer their baubles. Boys and girls wander about in search of some sort of adventure. For many the show is the street itself, with its huge neon signs. Eleven o'clock, the National Anthem marks the end of the performances in cinemas and theatres. Slowly the crowd pushes towards the tube station. A porter announces the departure of the last train. After midnight a few people still remain; girls, sailors, American servicemen - groups which from time to time the police try to disperse, without much effect. Two o'clock in the morning, and a few unsatisfied people still stay and wait.

"Nice Time" is a series of impressions of the actuality of Saturday night - an actuality which we have interpreted to extract from it a meaning, to present what Jean Vigo called: un point de vue documenté.

Le film: Charles est un film en trois temps. Premier temps: Charles-qui-ne-parle-pas. Charles paie de son silence cinquante ans de confort suisse. Ulcère à l'estomac, ulcère familial, petit vin blanc traître, tout cela parce que les mots n'étaient pas définitivement morts: ils grenouillent sous la surface tranquille. Deuxième temps: Charles-qui-parle. Dans le passé, les hommes s'adressaient à Dieu. Aujourd'hui, ils préfèrent de beaucoup parler à la Télévision. L'audience est plus large, mais les risques sont plus difficiles à évaluer. Charles, un peu par hasard (mais était-ce un hasard?) fait ses confessions aux téléspectateurs. Troisième temps: Charles-qui-a-parlé. Charles exorcisé. Charles qui disparaît. Il est irrécupérable: ne saute pas à l'eau qui veut. Le monde se démantibule. Il faut recourir au détective, à l'avocat, au psychiâtre. Charles est à la fois libre et prisonnier. Il s'en va à la dérive. Malheur et bonheur. De son canot de sauvetage, il envoie quelques fusées. Paul, un garçon qui passait par là avec Adeline les aperçoit. Projections, prix: 1969: Cannes (sélectionné par la Semaine de la Critique), Locarno ("Grand Prix"), Prime de Qualité.

The film: (Charles dead or alive?) Charles is a film in three modes. First mode: Charles the Silent. For his silence Charles has enjoyed fifty years of Swiss comfort. Stomach ulcer, family ulcer, white-wine hypocrisy, all because words have not become finally dead: they croak and groan under the tranquil surface of his life. Second mode: Charles speaks out. In the past, man communicated with God. Today man prefers to communicate with Television. The audience is larger, but the risks are harder to judge. Charles, apparently by chance (but is it chance?), makes his confession to the television viewers. Third mode: Charles Exorcised. He has spoken. Charles the Vanished. He is irrecoverable: they only jump into the deeps who want. The world is out of joint. The cure is to be found at the psychiatrist's, at the lawyer's, at the detective's office. Charles is free and a prisoner. He sidles out. Happiness and misery. From his lifeboat he sends up lights. They are seen: by Paul, a young man passing by, and Adeline. Performances, prizes: 1969: Cannes (selected by the Critics' Week), Locarno ("Grand Prix"), Swiss Government Award.
